I know how hard things are. Prices are up. Housing costs are sky-high. The pandemic has lingered longer than we hoped. I get it. That's why my staff and I are working 24/7 to help.

We've focused on bringing people together to get things done: fighting the pandemic and resulting health care and economic crises; supporting wildfire victims; educating our children; building affordable housing; delivering broadband; advocating for farmers; and combatting climate change.

But there is so much more to do. Success means working hard and working together. That's what I've done all my life.

As a single mom, I earned a degree and supported myself and my two girls. I know what it's like to scrape to make ends meet. As a water and land use consultant and part owner of our family farm, I learned firsthand what it takes to run a business.

I got involved in my city and became the first woman Mayor of Winters. In 2016 I was elected to represent our rural communities and small cities in the Assembly.

I pledged to make our needs and viewpoints heard in Sacramento, and I've done that every single day. It's not always easy in a legislature dominated by extreme voices on either side. But I've stayed true to my core values, exercised common sense, and held my own against powerful interests – and sometimes my own colleagues.

I hope I've earned your trust and your vote.
